

Don't get mad, get Stevens! The must-read whodunit for all those at High School, and all those who've managed to survive it! Inky Stevens the Great School Detective is a comic mystery that'll keep you guessing right to the bitter end. Teenager Inky Stevens is viewed as an outcast at Blinkton School. His leather-coated, gothic appearance sets him apart from all the other students. He measures his words carefully, only speaking when there's something significant to say. Yet despite his reclusive nature, Inky has a very special talent, one only whispered about behind closed hands. It's his ability to solve complex mysteries which has earned Inky the unspoken admiration of his peers. When any member of Blinkton School is in difficulty, Inky can always be relied on to help. In most cases, he's the only person who can. And working undercover, he's single-minded, tenacious and ruthless. Asking for nothing more than a token of appreciation, it's Inky's steely determination which has earned him the title of Great School Detective. Every breaktime Inky conceals himself away within the mountainous piles of debris that clutter up the backstage area in the school hall. He sits there alone in the semi-dark, silent and still. Waiting. Waiting for a needy visitor to present him with an irresistible challenge, one which intrigues and inspires him. And for that opportunity, Inky Stevens will wait as long as it takes. In the Case of the Caretaker's Keys it's Blinkton's caretaker, Frederick Varley, who pleads for Inky's assistance. The old man's bunch of keys have been stolen and with many areas unlocked, and the culprit at large, Blinkton School lies vulnerable and exposed. Fred's able to help Inky identify four possible suspects: Shaven-headed bully, Spud Barton. Empty-headed glamour-puss, Candy Sugarcane. Second-year brainbox, Crispin Merridew. And Mr Wilfred Whitkirk, the immaculately dressed Science technician. But for Inky the clock is ticking and a sinister force is lying in wait. His most dangerous case takes him deep undercover, hurtling towards a sinister conclusion. For Inky Stevens, and for Blinkton Comprehensive, a storm is brewing!
